

Confidentiality Agreement

Actors taking part in different stages of the Hackathon innovation competition in different roles may gain access to confidential information or trade secrets. For the sake of clarity, the party disclosing the information must state which of the materials, documents, etc. that it presents are confidential.

The party signing the confidentiality agreement undertakes to keep secret the confidential information that it has received from clients or other participants or that has otherwise come to its knowledge at different stages of the BioBoosters Hackathon. The undersigned undertakes not to disclose or make available confidential information to a third party or otherwise use the information without a separate written agreement concluded with the party disclosing the information.

Confidential information means the contents of ideas, solutions, products, business plans and trade secrets, regardless of the format in which they are presented.

The obligations set out in this confidentiality undertaking do not apply to information that can be proven by the undersigned to

- I. be generally known at the time of disclosure, available from public sources or later made publicly available without the undersigned breaching this confidentiality agreement; or
- II. have been created by and been rightfully in the possession of the undersigned before their disclosure; or
- III. have been rightfully received by the undersigned before or after its disclosure from a third party that has not required that the information should be kept confidential and that has not received the information from the party originally disclosing the information; or
- IV. be self-evident to an expert that is familiar with the professional field in question.

The undersigned understands that if they are in breach of the obligations of this confidentiality agreement, they will be liable for the damage caused by the breach of the obligation.

The obligations described in this confidentiality agreement will remain in effect for the duration of the Hackathon and for three (3) years after the end of the event.

I have read and understood the content of this confidentiality agreement and undertake to comply with it
